Use Photoshop Elements in the same way as you would in Photoshop. It's very simple and easy to start using. How do I use Elements? Open an image in Photoshop Elements You can start by opening an image in Photoshop Elements. If you want to open an image, drag and drop it onto the thumbnail of the program in the left-hand side of the screen. This will automatically open the file in Elements and place it on your desktop. You can drag and drop more than one file at the same time. Fill an image or select a region To edit an image, you need to select the area you want to edit. By clicking on the main image, you can select a specific area with the lasso tool (L). Use the Edge tools To edit the edges of a photo, select the line tool (Z) and hover over the photo. With this tool, you can add a black, thin line to create a frame or to outline an area. If you want, you can make that frame more precise by clicking on the line. Click and hold the area of the line that you want to highlight. The line becomes blue, and you can move the tool around by clicking and dragging it. For more precise work, you can add a blur by first selecting one of the three line tools. To add the blur effect, simply hover over the photo, and click the little add filter icon (Filter > Blur > Gaussian Blur). In this way, the window of the filter opens, and you can add the blur effect. If you want to remove a blur, simply click on the icon again. The program will close the filter window and remove the blur. Use the Selection tools to work on a part of the image. If you want, select a part of an image by clicking on it. You can create a new image with the rectangular selection tool (R). To make the selection smaller, click on the image, and move the mouse around until you have created a smaller selection. When you are happy with the size, simply press Enter/Return to close the selection. If you press and hold Enter/Return you will confirm the selection. To make the selection bigger, click on the image, and move the mouse around until you have made a larger selection. You can use the selection tools to remove a part of the image, by

A Glasgow law firm has said that the victims of child abuse can receive up to £10,000 after a court agreed compensation was due to victims of sex and drug crimes. Dependant children and ex-offenders who suffer the psychological effects of abuse will also receive up to £5,000, according to the high court in Glasgow. Aberdeen law firm Rorie said that more than 1,300 potential victims of sex, drugs and domestic abuse had been identified since the abuse came to light in 2006. Rorie executive director Angus Hogg said: “My firm and I have long argued that the victims of this appalling and very private type of criminal activity deserve to be compensated, even if it means they go without the standard of living they would expect. “We now have full details of the compensation to be paid – and it shows that we were right all along. I think we have seen the beginning of the end of the child abuse scandal in Scotland.” The firm said that £2m had been set aside by the Scottish government to fund the compensation payout after John Wilson, the founder of Rorie, and 11 other law firms lodged a claim. Wilson had been fighting for justice on behalf of abusers and their victims since the 1990s, said the Scottish government, claiming he had helped up to 1,800 people, including serving and former offenders and their families. Hogg added: “The fact that all the victims of abuse of the children are women, that is a tragedy in itself. But that fact should not detract from the case because the vast majority of abuse takes place against women. “Now that the compensation payout has been confirmed, I hope that something will be done to put in place a scheme that can compensate women who have been abused.” Rorie represents women who have been abused by their partners, men who have been abused by their families, men and women abused by strangers, women abused by nurses and women abused by care home workers.
