The processes and combustion technologies that have been developed, for both power generation and transportation fuel, have not been able to meet the needs of a growing population. In addition, fossil fuels contribute to the greenhouse effect and other environmental concerns. In addition to the uses described above, many processes and technologies are well known in the art for the production of valuable chemicals from natural gas. For example, an LPG-to-methanol process for the manufacture of methanol, wherein the natural gas is first contacted in a steam/methanol synthesis reactor to produce a liquid product stream containing methanol, water, and methane. In this reaction, the methanol is formed by reaction of water and carbon monoxide with hydrogen and carbon dioxide. The excess methane and carbon dioxide from the synthesis reactor are removed and the liquid product stream is fed to a water/methanol separation zone in which the water is removed, and the methanol is condensed. The methanol is fed to a methanol-to-methanol reaction zone, and excess hydrogen from the synthesis reactor is fed to the reaction zone. The methanol and hydrogen are reacted in the methanol-to-methanol reaction zone to produce additional methanol. The process conditions and the process composition in a typical methanol synthesis plant differ from those of an LPG-to-methanol plant, and a suitable methanol synthesis plant is described in greater detail in U.S. Pat. No. 5,408,017 to Scerbo et al., which is hereby incorporated by reference as though fully set forth herein. An olefin-to-acetylene process for producing acetylene, wherein an olefin stream is separated into a first fraction comprising a C3+ feed stream and into a second fraction comprising a C4-C6-feed stream, the first fraction is processed in a first reactor zone wherein the C3+ feed stream is reacted with H2 at elevated temperature and pressure to produce a first product stream comprising C3+-containing olefins, and the C4-C6-feed stream is reacted with H2 in a second reactor zone to produce a second product stream comprising C4-C6-containing olefins and optionally
