About Game Development: Studios like Ubisoft and Epic Games prefer to present their products in a completely new and fresh way, they have their own game designer in-house who is always thinking about the game and the new ideas in it. While it's true that such processes are very helpful, from time to time they have had to temporarily lose their creativity, since they had so many other projects on their hands. This is when they turn to indie game designers, capable of solving any game-related problem. In doing so, they're guaranteed to get a useful idea that will return a lot of profits and funding for the original studio. Moreover, as the game is on hand, any change in the game can be easily implemented and this can be done in times of tight deadlines, a momentous undertaking and lots of troubles. ic Core The High Speed Cataclysmic Core (abbreviated HSC) is the central part of a Modulated Derecho (also called an Electrojet). The HSC focuses the de-energized magnetic field into a narrow, intense core that propagates across the interior of the storm. At extremely high electron densities, the storm becomes a highly super-heated plasma fireball. Geology and dynamics Modulated Derecho versus Electrojet An electrojet is a narrow, fast-moving, intense and highly de-energized region of electrons that propagates quickly through the storm. The de-energized electrons become trapped, strengthening the magnetic field over a specific location in the storm and making the region grow. As the region becomes brighter, the plasma is heated to produce cold plasma waves. These waves, similar to electromagnetic waves in solids, propagate through the storm in the opposite direction to the direction of travel of the de-energized electrons. The waves propagate into the plasma and energize neutral particles in the medium through entrainment, setting the atoms and molecules of the medium into motion. The energized atoms and molecules light up with secondary emissions, creating the characteristic bright light and characteristic messengers or 'molecules' of a satellite storm. Within the core of a de-energized electrojet, the electrons are trapped. Magnetostatics work in that region, assisting in the upward mass flow from below, by day. During the 1859 solar flare, which accompanied a high speed electrojet (also called an electrojet), Gassendi on the Bellatrix Station observed that the amplifying magnetism made the air above the solar surface tilt concave, or convex, in the opposite direction to the atmospheric pressure that comes in from above. That large, added pressure is gravitationally balanced by the concave curvature, which allows air to descend and become more dense, or more slowly move upward again. A modulated Derecho is a broader region that occurs every day. It is also a region of un-trapped electrons in the storm. But like the core of an electrojet, the modulated derecho region is hollow and has a strong magnetic field. However, the magnetic field is variable and alternating rather than constant. The un-trapped electrons spread out inside the region, producing strong diffuse, light-rays which travel very slowly through the center of the region. By being different from the
