Field of the Invention This invention relates to an improved service table for receiving disposable bags. The improved service table is constructed for stacking disposable bags in a manner to prevent contamination of the disposable bags by particulate matter as well as by liquids. The service table is particularly suited for loading into and unloading from an oven. 2. Description of Related Art Various types of disposable bags have long been used in the handling of food products. For example, the packaging of pasta, chips, and other food products is typically accomplished using bags made of heat shrinkable film. The bags are filled, sealed and loaded, and then loaded into and removed from an oven where the bags are heated and then cooled, all within a short period of time. The bags are also typically discarded after use, usually in a landfill or other waste disposal area. In the past, the loading of disposable bags into and unloading of disposable bags from an oven has been accomplished in a variety of ways. Generally, a disposable bag is loaded into an oven and then partially unrolled to allow a loading device, such as a hopper, to scoop the bag up and deposit
