I've been waiting for this little dynamic because it has almost all the more I play on PC games. It will be it be, so it's sad that you will go away, but that you have enough quality to bring back and share with us still be a great option for serious players. Why isn't the Demo available to play online? Offline it's just fine. I don't want to have to pay for it to play the Demo offline. I would like to make the demo available to play it while I wait for all of the servers to return online. Why should people have to pay for a demo for online play? This is just another way the "internet" is backing it's selves like they always have. The only real way to play this game, is to buy it. Im not happy. I hope yall know what you are doing. If not, stop playing video games. Thanks. I would love to support the development and progress of such a great game such as this. But to be forced to purchase the game to be able to play a demo? And to PLAY online?.....wow. I cannot support such. Perhaps a demo with this being available offline would be a fair way to go. The last demo I played was a long time ago and I don't remember very many details. I just remember enjoying playing it. Yes, I'm aware that there's online component to the game; I also know that there's a free trial component. In my memory, there was a limit of two game sessions per day for the trial period, both of which

The Zombie Survival of Frankenheight is a sequel to Destroy All Humans! 2, which is itself a sequel to Destroy All Humans!, which is a sequel to Destroy All Humans! It was developed by Twisted Pixel, and published by 2K Games. It is the sequel to the 2009 game Destroy All Humans! 2, and was released on November 6, 2015. Contents Gameplay

The gameplay of the original game is considered the "joke" of the series, following the same general formula. A small team of four characters has to save humanity and their chosen city of Frankenheight from hordes of zombies, while they themselves are being attacked by other surviving humans (as they are the protagonists), trying to survive the apocalypse as well. The story is continued after the events of the first game, and the city of Frankenheight is not destroyed. However, the game itself is set a few weeks after the events of Destroy All Humans! 2: Survival of the Fittest. The Zombie Survival of Frankenheight features the same gameplay and design as the first game, but a few changes have been implemented to improve aspects. The first major addition is the increased difficulty of the game. This is especially noticeable in the first level, where additional living humans are introduced who are more challenging to defeat than any enemy encountered in the previous game. Other improvements were made to make the game more survival-oriented. A zombie's spawning point is no longer random and they will automatically follow the player if they can see the player, whereas previously they would only approach the player after following a specific path. The zombie AI is also somewhat tweaked with zombies no longer automatically attacking the player if they are already in melee. This was changed to prevent the player from being able to shelter behind the player character and sneak attacks are no longer possible. In addition to these changes, several new enemies were added to the game, such as a hobo, an undead punk rocker, and an undead Native American. Zombie Survival of Frankenheight also introduces a number of new weapons, such as the Zombie Puppeteer Machine Gun. This weapon was added to the game to lighten the difficulty of the second level, as zombies cannot be harmed by anything other than that specific weapon. A new weapon of the group is the Crystal Dart Gun, which is a one-hit kill and only effective against several types of zombies. The player's group can now possess enemies and use their items, something that was not possible in the previous game. The transformation is limited
