I've been reading and working with Photoshop since Version 4. I am quite surprised at how hard the learning curve has become as new versions come out. Between the latest updates and the fact that the UI has changed so much, I honestly don't know what to expect. I guess the website has a post about it, but honestly, I am unconvinced. There is also a skyrocketing price for professional Photoshop users. An Adobe upgrade or refresh is always a topic of debate when it comes to software vendors. Our analysis is rather subjective and is based on opinions from third-party website reviews, and opinions from customers. There are many factors to consider, like the cost and functionality, quality and investment weights. Obviously the more people praise something, the easier it will be for the software vendor to market and sell their products. Of course, the final decision is what you want for yourself. Personally, I am not ready to give up Photoshop yet. I am just exploring the new features and see how easy it is to use. Photoshop, and even more so, the Creative Suite, now has a more intuitive and streamlined UI. This applies to the whole thing, including the interface, the user experience, and the content itself. The content itself has also been streamlined somewhat. Discoveries are now more discoverable, especially within panels. A new Filter panel is also available. You can apply any of the filters by choosing them from a list, or create your own custom filter template. This should be useful for anyone who is usually creating their own custom blend modes or even just wants to see a list of Blend Modes.
